Somewhere in a barren land, The Crimson Company, a team of miners, struck the Earth with their chip axes of bronze. They searched for Garnet, glimmering of crimson, found not far from the door. Through the passing of years, spiraling stairs were carved where the stone was warm. Descending with lamps and torches they went. To find stone that shimmered blue. But the stone was scorching, and the miners tired, The work dangerous and the pay low, they pressed on. The halls now empty, and the ore gone, they moved on with their chip axes of bronze.
